MARKET COMMENTARY

In early November 2024, the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) reduced the federal funds rate by 25 basis points, setting the target range to 4.50%-4.75%. This decision followed a 50 basis point cut in September, marking a continued effort to support economic growth amid easing inflation and a softening labor market. The FOMC emphasized that future rate adjustments would be data-driven, with a potential for a more gradual pace of cuts in 2025 due to persistent inflation concerns.

Looking forward we believe that the recent election of President Donald Trump has introduced potential inflationary pressures, stemming from proposed policies such as massive deportation drive, increased tariffs and tax cuts. These policies could lead to higher consumer prices, prompting the Federal Reserve to adopt a cautious approach in its monetary policy. Market expectations have adjusted accordingly, with projections now indicating only 75 basis points of cuts by the end of 2025.

In South Africa the Reserve Bank (SARB) lowered the repo rate in November by 25 basis points to 7.75%, the lowest level since April 2023. This move was influenced by a significant decline in the consumer price index (CPI), which rose by 2.8% year-on-year in October, down from 3.8% in September-the lowest inflation rate since June 2020. Despite this rate cut the SARB Governor Lesetja Kganyago signalled a cautious approach to future cuts, citing global economic uncertainties and domestic price pressures.

Following the SARB's decision, the South African rand strengthened, trading at 18.04 against the U.S. dollar, a 0.4% improvement. However, the rand had previously depreciated sharply against the dollar after President Trump's election victory, reflecting market concerns over potential shifts in US. economic policy.

From a sovereign rating outlook point of view, Fitch Ratings has recently indicated that South Africa's credit outlook could improve if the government successfully stabilizes its debt in line with its three-year fiscal plan. As such, a positive debt trajectory may lead to an upgrade in the SA sovereign rating, enhancing investor confidence and potentially strengthening the rand further.
